THE AMERICAN BEHAVIORAL SCIENTIST is published monthly except July and August in New York City. It is written by and for social scientists and associated laymen, and carries accounts of inter-disciplinary research, articles on creativity and social invention, comments on the relations between behavioral scientists and society and government, and broad annotated listings of new studies with analytical indexing. It stresses general theory and operationalism, and aims at establishing the role of behavioral science in the modern world. Contributions and comments are invited. The ABS is indexed in Public Affairs Information Service, and The Mental Health Book Review Index. It is abstracted in Psychological Abstracts, and microfilmed by University Microfilms, Ann Arbor, Michigan.
